COURSE DESCRIPTION
This comprehensive review is directed primarily to neurologists in practice, primary care physicians, and other allied healthcare professionals who evaluate movement disorder patients. The emphasis of this intermediate level program is fundamental diagnosis and treatment of issues that commonly confront the clinician. A combined format of lectures, case presentations, panel discussions, and video vignettes provides a thorough review of the differential diagnosis and treatment of these movement disorders. Active audience participation is strongly encouraged.

If you are unable to attend this course in-person, we will also be offering the option to participate via a live-stream webcast. Webcast registration will be available four months prior to the course at https://ce.mayo.edu/neurology-and-neurologic-surgery/node/14717.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES
Upon completion of this activity, participants should be able to:
1) Differentiate between the most common hyperkinetic and hypokinetic movement disorders
2) Differentiate between essential tremor versus Parkinson’s disease
3) Compare Parkinson’s disease from atypical Parkinsonian syndromes
4) Assess the first-line pharmacologic options for the most common movement disorders
5) Compare the indications for botulinum toxin therapy of movement disorders
6) Describe the indications for deep brain stimulation surgery of movement disorders
7) Identify which pharmacological treatment should be used for management of early Parkinson’s disease

Attendance at this Mayo Clinic course does not indicate nor guarantee competence or proficiency in the performance of any procedures which may be discussed or taught in this course.

INTENDED AUDIENCE
Primary Care Physicians, Neurologists, NPs, PAs, RNs and other allied health professionals who evaluate movement disorder patients will find this intermediate level program valuable to their fundamental diagnosis and treatment.
