

Taking Great Pains: Tapentadol as a Mu Consideration for Pain Management

Session Date: 11/30/2021

Session Time: 11:00 – 11:45 AM (CST)

Target Audience

This continuing education (CE) session was planned to meet the needs of professional staff who deal with the selection and monitoring of medication(s) as part of their patient care duties, including pharmacists, RNs, APRNs, PAs, MDs.

Activity Overview

Historically, clinical trials were not conducted for pediatric drugs initially targeted for adult populations. For this reason, approved treatment options, specifically for pain management, are limited in children, especially in preterm neonates and young infants. Current pharmacological options for pain management include nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory, nonopioid analgesic, and weak and strong opioid medications. To close the gap and expand medications that can be used in pediatric populations, this presentation will review the current literature to describe tapentadol use in pediatric populations, compare its efficacy and adverse effects to oxycodone, and review overall tolerability in both pediatric and adult populations.

Learning Objectives

At the conclusion of this knowledge-based CE session, participants should be able to:

1. Describe the pharmacokinetic and pharmacodynamic properties of opioids in pediatric and adult populations
2. Identify clinical scenarios that favor either tapentadol or oxycodone in the treatment of moderate to severe pain
3. Select a preferred agent for moderate to severe pain when either tapentadol or oxycodone are acceptable
