

ESEOSA T. IGHODARO, M.D., Ph.D.

Dr. Eseosa Ighodaro, M.D., Ph.D. is a native of Kentucky where she graduated with honors and summa cum laude with a Bachelor of Science in biology and minors in chemistry and French from the University of Kentucky. After graduation, she matriculated into the combined MD/PhD program at the University of Kentucky College of Medicine where she was the 1st African American female to complete the MD/PhD program. During her training, she has published numerous articles on dementia, cerebrovascular disease, and health inequalities within the African Americans. Her recent publications have been features in Nature and Nature Medicine. Moreover, she has received numerous awards for her activism work on campus and within the community.

Currently, she is a neurologist (PGY-3), neuroscientist, and health advocate at Mayo Clinic in Rochester, MN. Her current research interests focus on understanding the role of racism in neurological disorders. You can check out her work on her professional website at www.dreseosaighodaro.com