

Human Trafficking 2020 Online Course

Activity Description

Human trafficking is a global pandemic and healthcare providers are on the front lines of being able to identify and help victims. The International Labour Organization (ILO) estimates that 24.9 million men, women, and children are bought, sold, and enslaved around the world is often hidden in plain sight. They are in factories, fields, private homes, and on our streets; and every day, they interact with healthcare providers. No population is exempt: it affects all ages, races, genders, sexual orientations, ethnicities, and other demographics.

Healthcare professionals are in a unique and trusted position, making it imperative for them to be fully informed about human trafficking. Ideally, physicians and other allied professionals can be part of what is referred to as a “multidisciplinary response” to trafficking. This means that within the healthcare setting and the community, providers should be able to identify both the presence of human trafficking within their practice setting and know about resources within their communities to be able to assist trafficked persons.

This course satisfies the Florida Board of Medicines requirement for 1 credits in Human Trafficking.
