Time to REVISE our Approach? Updates on Stress Ulcer Prophylaxis in the ICU

Session Date: 11/26/2024

Session Time: 11:00 – 11:45 AM (CST)

Target Audience

This continuing education (CE) session was planned to meet the needs of professional staff who deal with the selection and monitoring of medication(s) as part of their patient care duties, including pharmacists, RNs, APRNs, PAs, MDs.

Activity Overview

The Society of Critical Care Medicine released a guideline update on the prevention of stress-related gastrointestinal bleeding in critically ill adults in August 2024, outlining key patient populations that are at increased risk for significant bleeding events in which prevention is reasonable. In July 2024, a randomized control trial was published finding benefit with pharmacologic prevention for a patient population not recommended in the guidelines. The presentation will review past and current literature outlining how guidelines have changed throughout the years in relation to practice updates. The benefit and safety of pharmacologic prevention will also be called into question by assessing recent literature.

Learning Objectives

At the conclusion of this knowledge-based CE session, participants should be able to:

1. Identify risk factors for clinically significant gastrointestinal bleeding in patients requiring intensive care.
2. Describe the benefit of using stress ulcer prophylaxis in critically ill patients.
3. Recognize safety considerations when using pharmacological agents for stress ulcer prophylaxis.
