Finding Consensus: DPYD Testing and Capecitabine Administration

Session Date: 01/27/2026

Session Time: 11:00 – 11:45 AM (CST)

Target Audience

This continuing education (CE) session was planned to meet the needs of professional staff who deal with the selection and monitoring of medication(s) as part of their patient care duties, including pharmacists, RNs, APRNs, PAs, MDs.

Activity Overview

Fluorouracil, and its prodrug capecitabine, are the most prescribed therapies worldwide for solid tumors. Despite their efficacy, some patients experience serious adverse effects, including cardiotoxicity, myelosuppression, diarrhea, mucositis, and hand-foot syndrome. Research indicates that some patients are likely to experience these toxicities due to producing reduced function variants of dihydropyrimidine dehydrogenase, an enzyme responsible for metabolizing fluorouracil. In October 2025, the FDA added a boxed warning to capecitabine instructing providers to administer pharmacogenomic testing to determine the activity level of dihydropyrimidine dehydrogenase prior to administering capecitabine. This presentation will review relevant literature and examine current controversies surrounding this new testing requirement.

Learning Objectives

At the conclusion of this knowledge-based CE session, participants should be able to:

1. Identify key enzymes responsible for capecitabine efficacy and potential toxicity.
2. Describe current literature findings regarding patients with DPYD gene variations.
3. Recommend a DPYD testing strategy that incorporates understanding of DPYD testing utility and FDA requirements.
