For 15 years, Amanda served as a middle and high school Health and Family & Consumer Sciences teacher in rural school districts. That background in secondary education formed the ideal foundation for her current work with the college's EduSTAT grant, where she is passionate about driving equity and expanding access for rural students seeking healthcare education. She leads Classroom Outreach and career exploration initiatives across the schools in CVTC's 11-county district, directly connecting with students to help them navigate dual-credit opportunities, discover healthcare pathways, and confidently take their next steps toward higher education.
