Jennifer Livingston is the Director of Community Engagement at Mayo Clinic Health System, where she leads a team that serves as a bridge between the health system and the communities it serves. Across 16 hospital sites, their work centers on building relationships, listening to community voices, and bringing those insights back into the organization, helping leaders better understand local needs, strengthen trust and partnerships, and position the health system to serve communities well now and into the future. Passionate about rural health, Jennifer believes strong health systems are built by staying closely connected to the people and places they serve.

Before joining Mayo Clinic Health System, Jennifer spent 25 years as a television news anchor and reporter, earning numerous honors, including 11 Emmy Awards and a national Edward R. Murrow Award. A storyteller at heart, she brings that same curiosity, love of people, and belief in the power of connection to her work today.
